A large white structure seems of importance to the site. The idea of organization or institution is associated with this structure. A sense of fragmented bureaucracy is present, with numbers of small groups of men and women going about their specialized duties in support of the specialized interests assigned to them. The normal concern with "empire building" and protection of area of personal responsibility is obvious. Each serves with the best interest of the organization primarily in mind, with their own self-aggrandizement relegated to second place, but because of parochial view and perspective, each thinks the interests of their own narrow sphere are paramount to the well-being of the organization at large. These people serve one specific person or organizational entity which has preeminence and overall authority. Their loyalty to this entity is ungestioned, but their shorter perspectives sometimes cause them to serve in their functions against the most efficient or best interests of he/she/they whom they serve. There is presently some crisis confronting the overall organization, and steps are being taken to address the crisis. Both subtlety and outright confrontation must be exercised in varying degrees and at various points in the strategic formulations employed. There is some disagreement behind the scenes as to what strategy exactly to follow, but this is superficially disguised to present a unified front. However, the outcomes and results of the strategies when implemented often inadvertantly reveal the subsurface dissonances, since not everyone is "reading off the same sheet of music" when things hit the fan. The situation remains in a state of flux at present, but will probably deteriorate considerably before it gets better.
